You can do this easily and quickly using a smartphone or an application provided by your employer.

Why do you have to do this?

The government has set up this obligation to identify who is present at the workplace in order to enhance workplace safety and to fight social security fraud more effectively.

When do you have to register your attendance?

You must register your attendance when you:
- arrive at the workplace (IN)
- leave the workplace (OUT)

You must register your attendance immediately and at the site (in real time).

Who does what?

You must register your attendance through the or government service, called:
Check in and out at work.

Ask your employer for further instructions.

Both you and your employer can check your registration.

How do you do that?

You can register your attendance in two ways.

1. With a smartphone

If your employer requests you to register your attendance using your smartphone, you have three options:

- You go to your employer's app, where you register your attendance.
- You receive a QR code or a web link from your employer. That link takes you to Check in and out at work, which registers your attendance.
- Or go directly to the Check in and out at work online service, where you can fill in the required information to complete the registration.

Please keep the following in mind, however:

- For the last two options, you must log in with Itsme of the MyGov app. So, be sure to have one of these apps installed. Non Belgians should use eIDAS or email TOTP to register their attendance.
- Activate geolocation on the smartphone.

2. With your badge or another method

Your employer can also choose to have attendance registered automatically if you use your badge or with another method provided by your employer.
